Universities seeking stressed, burnt-out and depressed GPs. Can you help?

Despite doctors, including GPs, being more likely to experience reduced well-being and mental health symptoms, there is evidence that they also have insufficient access and face barriers to mainstream healthcare provision for such problems.

A research project is being undertaken by Bristol, Keele and UCL universities to explore ways access to treatment can be improved. They are looking for GP participants for a paid, confidential, qualitative study about GPs with anxiety, depression, stress or burnout.
